• "I work the top three capitals: Kiev, Moscow, Minsk. I never scout for girls in a club. That's rule number one. It's totally unprofessional. If I approach a girl and say, 'You could be a model, and I could be your manager,' she would think I'm just trying to pick her up. Anyway, most of the girls I scout for are not going to clubs yet. If the girl's in the club, she's probably already represented, or she's not a model and never will be. I hold most of my meetings in restaurants. What do I look for? Blonds with light eyes. Scouting is completely different than what I've been studying all my life. It's very difficult to find what I'm looking for, and at times I've thought about quitting. But with God's help, I've been fortunate enough to find very beautiful girls. I don't find girls on the street or anything. We make appointments. I see their pictures before I come over, and we set up meetings. They're usually very shy. The mothers, on the other hand—one of them called me once from a nightclub and asked if I wanted to come over."

BILY KUN
 The crowd is a mix of French- and English-speaking patrons, which is the key in this city: Too French a bar and no one will understand you; too English and you miss out on the French women.

CASA CRUZ
 Casa Cruz somehow lacks the attitude of high-fashion hot spots in Manhattan or Mayfair, even if most of the Maybellined women here do hail from N.Y.C. and London.
